May 2005      The Art of the Network: Strategic Interaction and Patronage in Renaissance Florence (under contract with Duke University Press).

The book examines the strategic, career-making activity of the writers of Florentine patronage letters, showing how they actively constructed their social networks and presented credible portraits of themselves through a host of conversational and discursive techniques that appear with marked regularity in thousands of letters. It offers to sociologists of culture a set of concepts borrowed (in part) from discourse analysis, concepts that help transcend the divide between self-interest-based and structural position-based explanations of 'networking.' It analyzes the social history of the key Renaissance concept of honor, and describes how this strategic interaction impinged on the development of the Florentine state and on modern constructions of the self.
